/// visualizing gentrification: bridging land use, data and ethnography

SOC / UEP 395 special topics

Students are challenged with the myths and realities of gentrification in an immersive discussion. The proposed course weaves urban planning, mapping and data research with qualitative analysis to recognize gentrification drivers, examine the pending experiential trauma of displacement and the community's aspirations and resistance. Course examines the communities of Northeast Los Angeles as they face three colossal planning projects that utilize gentrification as a catalyst and justification for their development.

In a holistic examination of the landscape, course participants will embed with community and other partners to explore the social
